Children of Darkness

Rafael Chi Montalvo

El Museo Del Barrio, West Wing
October 28, 1982-February 11, 1983
"...the war between the children of light and the children of darkness rages on to eternity. Endowed with the power of God and their unprincipled scorn for chaos, the children of light are apt to win the battles. But the children of darkness are said to have many more alternatives; they surge from the void unto life—they are seekers of light."

Rafael Colón Morales, October, 1982

The work selected for this exhibition traces the last ten years of Rafael Colón-Morales' search to extend the range of painting. Working with acrylic, he explores the full potential of this medium, in order to re-affirm the validity and meaningfulness of painting as a contemporary means of artistic expression.

During the late sixties, contrary to the technically conventional and traditional formality of the San Juan artist, Colón-Morales adopts the technique of free and spontaneous expression. Surrealistic paintings produced during this period mark for the artist the development of a coherent philosophy about his work and a break from commercialism and the established esthetic.

Relocating to New York in the early 1970s, the artist abandons figurative content and produces a series of highly textured abstract paintings. Eventually, experimentation leads him into the development of the acrylic hanging skin. He incorporates into these translucent acrylic skins, not only geometric forms, but also culturally rooted biomorphic and mythological figures. For Colón-Morales this is the beginning of a struggle to find a balance between experimentation and automatism in his work—a challenge which he welcomes. The title of the exhibition, "Children of Darkness" for the artist refers to a state of being in which the subjects emerge from darkness in search of knowledge.

Gladys Peña, Curator
I

Walter Friedlander has written that two basic currents run throughout the history of French art, the rational and the irrational. Friedlander might well have applied that description to the art of all of Western civilization. The rational school is perhaps best exemplified by Nicholas Poussin (1594-1665) and the calculated formality of his composition. This tendency was later to inspire the neo-classical movement as championed by Jacques Louis-David. The irrational tendency, often labeled as sensual and decorative by its detractors, was to find its maximum development in the works of the Flemish, Peter Paul Rubens. His art, like that of Velazquez, was characterized by loose and free brushstrokes and took delight in the richness of objects. The work of Rafael Colón-Morales is steeped in the irrational tradition of the Rubenist—rich in the sensuality of color, movement, form and spirit.

However, the works covered by this retrospective (1972 through 1982) must also be understood in iconographic terms. The almost overpowering wealth of personal symbols that are steeped in the past and present lore and reality of the Caribbean, and in particular of Puerto Rico, makes the articulation of these pieces more complex, and compels the viewer to study and compare works so that their inner meanings may be understood. The works on view are the culmination of many years of inward searching for truth by Colón-Morales. Although these iconographic meanings are new, they are certainly steeped in the rich mythology of the Arawak-speaking Taino Indians. Once understood, the symbols which these creatures represent begin to reveal truths not evident in a speedy analysis. The work of Rafael Colón-Morales must also be understood within the specific cultural context in which they were produced. These pieces are echoes of long forgotten cultures that are essential to the understanding of today’s Antillian.

II

When viewing the work of Colón-Morales one is aware of the high energy and the seeming chaos. Forceful diagonals create a pictorial sensation of movement that may be related to the work of Jackson Pollock. Although Pollock’s approach is spontaneous, his work like that of Rafael Colón-Morales is not completely the result of chance—they are carefully thought out. Such is the case with “Retorno a la Tierra,” (1979) and less so with the experimental works such as “El Techo,” (1975). During periods of experimentation Colón-Morales’ work tends to be non-objective. The iconographic problems are almost non-existent in these transitional works where the artist is more interested in technical proficiency. I shall refer to these works more in detail in my discussion of the pellejos (skins), but our main concern here is to get a grasp of this private iconoclasm which so enriches this work.

In “Retorno a la Tierra” the action occurs at dusk or night, the sky is a deep rich blue. In the right hand corner is a Bohío [peasant shack] in front of which is a figure half man and half animal. At a slight distance from this figure and forming something of a concentric circle are seen a number of various other references to animals, some real (the horse), some mythological, (the dragon), and others that are the product of the artist imaginative reality. Whereas the dragon and the horse are facing away from this circle the other insect-like creatures have the effect of keeping this grouping together. In this picture we see many of the creatures that appear in other works sometimes in different groupings.

Why are the horse and dragon looking away from the action? The answer certainly requires a familiarity with the culture, history and traditions of the Caribbean. Horses were brought to the New World by Spain, and only too frequently they were used by the military classes in their campaigns to conquer the aboriginal inhabitants. Legends in Europe, North and South America frequently use the white horse as a symbol of dignity and purity of intention and strength. However, in “Retorno a la Tierra,” the horse is viewed not as a strong conquerer but almost as a disinterested and tired participant. He slowly moves away from the crowd that surrounds him and his head is low. If we juxtapose his weary movement with that of the green dragon we see an intense interaction. The dragon is running away with great vitality and the other creatures seem quietly to be enjoying the reposition of their land. To be sure, the moods suggested by these animals mirror those of human beings.

When one considers that the only reference to humans is in the form of a centaur, the varying personalities of the animals take on a greater poignancy. Compared to “Retorno a la Tierra,” the “Children of Darkness” series (1975 to 1980) explodes with anger and tense activity. In “Children of Darkness III,” horses of various sizes attack a white dove. The angularity of the horses create sharp edges that charge the canvas with great tension. The dove is serene, with its head held high as it defends itself against the larger aggressors or conquistadores. The mad, frenzied movement around the dove is heightened by the very whiteness of its color. If physical reality demands that dove be smaller than horses, the more subjective reality represented in the work suggests a spiritual bigness. Interestingly, the series works in reverse, for in the earlier larger works, the dove appears passive whereas the horses are free to act as they wish. In the last piece of the series the dove reacts, symbolically this is also the smallest work in the series. This apparent contradiction of the large aggressors vs. the small yet symbolically larger dove has its parallel in Puerto Rican folklore and literature. Among the Island’s peasants, lore abounds in which the large guaráguao can only be killed by the small pittire. Such legends serve as a somewhat tragic ray of hope and valor in the face of oppression and injustice; behind this idea lies the greater concept that the small or poor man someday will be able to conquer his oppressors, be they individuals or institutions.

If the dove is therefore a symbol of the small man we must then ask again what the horse symbolizes? Once again we must see it as a negative force. In “Retorno a La Tierra” the horse turns away from the tranquility of the bohio, but in “Children of Darkness” the horse is hostile, aggressive and oppressive. The image of the aggressive horse is a more frequent articulation in Colón-Morales’ work, eg. “El Mal de Bubas,” (1976), “Pollo Raz,” (1976), “Hijos del Caos” (1978), “Remonteremos” (1980), and others. Noted earlier in this essay, the horse is not native to the New World, but rather was introduced to the American continent through the Spanish colonization. It would therefore be safe to see the horse in the work of Colón-Morales as a symbol of the European settlers who brought it over. This use of the horse is in complete contrast to the significance of the same animal in Picasso’s “Guernica.” In “Guernica” the horse is the common man’s ally who along with his master is tortured and killed. This vision is common to the European tradition, and has been imposed on the American Psyche. Colón-Morales breaks with this concept, thereby creating a new iconography, a New World or at least Antillean imagery for the horse.

In this cruel, vicious and aggressive world there are also insects that are native to the Caribbean. These same sharp forms can be seen in much of Wilfredo Lam’s Cuban jungle paintings. Similar in form but different in iconography, the insects in Colón-Morales’ paintings of this period are giant creatures as in “Lilbélulas” (1979), and “Insecto Interior” (1979). These are creatures that cannot go beyond their smallness and are symbolically the antithesis of the dove in “Children of Darkness.” In fact, in “Retorno a la Tierra,” they sit placidly with the horse and dragon.

Other animals such as cows and birds enhance the iconographic depths of Colón-Morales' work. By deciphering their meanings the viewer will have a more gratifying experience. Iconographic symbols are one of the oldest means of communication known to man. They fill the walls of Lascaux and become bewildering in Greek and African mythology. They protected the Early Christians, enriched the Byzantine world and continue to exist into our very age. Man has very frequently had to hide or amend his message with symbols that were understood by the members of the “group.” In the 20th Century, and particularly since the 1950s, artists frequently have developed highly personal icons. Only too often the capability of these personal icons to communicate more profound universal ideas has been limited to a visual monologue—or at best, a dialogue with an intellectual elite. The uniqueness of Colón-Morales' work in part lies in the fact that although his symbolic language is personal, it is steeped in the much older traditions of Europe and pre-Columbian America, most particularly the Caribbean Basin, and with careful observation slowly reveals its messages to us. As we have seen, these paintings use the Caribbean reality and specifically the Puerto Rican condition to make universal statements about the nature of man. The lessons to be learned are not about the aggressiveness they often depict, but of justice and humane understanding of our fellow man. In this sense they are a rational use of irrational forms.
About the Pellejos

Among the varied technical achievements of Rafael Colón-Morales the most highly creative is the pellejos, or skins. The process of making these paintings which hang suspended in air merits a special description.

The pellejos emerged from his earlier experiments with texture. These experiments, exemplified by “Lagartijos” (1974) and “El Techo,” (1975) were free in form and full of motion. In them we can see the same energy that fills many of his acrylic skins. Eventually figures introduced into the compositions, as well as technical adaptations that provided depth, resulted in the three-dimensionality of his pellejo paintings.

In making a pellejo the artist applies paint directly to any shape or size glass. When the surface dries, new layers of paint are applied, using the same colors or others, until the desired consistency is reached. He then peels the paint off the glass. The hardened acrylic is transparent as a stained glass window and as flexible as linen. This process of layering paint also allows the artist to experiment with his imagery. As the surface of the painting thickens the images are sometimes altered and the painting on the final top layer may interact with those on the bottom layers. Ideally, the pellejos should be hung from ceilings in front of large windows, or at a small distance from the entry of light. This permits the viewer to see the development of the work, including compositional “errors.”

The artist has searched inexcusably for new ways to manipulate acrylic skins. Characteristics of the medium: its flexibility, translucency and three-dimensionality presented exhibition problems which forced him into further experimentation. The problems were fortunate, as can be seen from the results. Some pieces have been transferred onto plexiglass and others onto canvas, as assemblages which incorporate small objects—a razor blade, a paint tube, a photograph, perhaps, may find their way into these highly organized constructions. He has also turned them into sculptures by mounting them on objects such as a wooden horse, a chair or the metal frame of a folding cot.

Although these experiments express Rafael Colón-Morales' interest in painting as a still viable medium, their content is also indicative of his preoccupation with mythology of the Taino Indians of Puerto Rico. To him the mythology of this early culture is a tool for the formulation of thought and he utilizes myths in many of his works to express his personal vision, desires, anxieties and needs. The pellejos, to Colón-Morales, represent the shedding of skin which is the symbol of rebirth—a constant theme in the mythology of the pre-Columbian Indian of the Caribbean.

Mario Cesar Romero October, 1982

Special thanks to Drs. Elizabeth Parker and Andree Haytim of the Art History Dept. at Fordham University for their guidance.

We must look and look till we live the painting, and for a fleeting moment become identified with it. If we do not succeed—it is useless to lie to ourselves into believing that we do. A good rough test is whether we feel that it is reconciling us with life. No artifact is a work of art if it does not help to humanize us. Without art, visual, verbal and musical, our world would be a jungle.

From the correspondence of Bernhard Berenson, Villa I Tatti, Florence. January, 1952

13 El Techo, 1975 / Acrylic Skin on Canvas, 70 x 84
43 Catre, 1978 / Acrylic Skin on Object
5  Hueso I, 1972 / Oil on Canvas, 40 × 42½
21  Orgánico, 1976 / Acrylic on Canvas, 42 x 57
Biographical Notes

1941 Born in Trujillo Alto, Puerto Rico
1959 Received scholarship from the New York Post to study Fine Arts, University of Puerto Rico.
1964 Graduated with High Honors from the University of Puerto Rico.
1965-66 Graduate Studies at the American University, Washington D.C.
1966-67 Studied Graphics at the San Fernando Academy of Arts, Madrid, Spain.
1968-71 Instructor of Fine Arts, University of Puerto Rico, Río Piedras and Arecibo campuses, Puerto Rico.
1972-76 Instructor of "History of Puerto Rican Art", Brooklyn Community College, New York.
1972-76 Instructor of "History of Puerto Rican Art", New York State University, Albany, New York.
1978-81 Instructor of Printing and Graphics, School of Arts of the Museo del Barrio, New York.

Selected Individual Exhibits

1963 Museo de la Universidad de Puerto Rico, Río Piedras, Puerto Rico. Paintings
1965 Instituto de Cultura Puertorriqueña, San Juan, Puerto Rico. Paintings
1968 Galería Santiago, San Juan, Puerto Rico. Paintings
1975 Friends of Puerto Rico, New York. Drawings and Environmental Installation
1978 Cayman Gallery, New York. Paintings and Sculptures
1981 International Monetary Fund, Washington, D.C. Paintings
1982 Galería Morivivi, New York. Miniatures and Hanging Acrylic Skins

Selected Collective Exhibits

1974 Festival de Navidad, Annual Show, Ateneo Puertorriqueño, San Juan, Puerto Rico
1976 Iman-Latin American Artists in New York, Center for Interamerican Relations, New York
1977 Latin Artist, Xerox Annual International Exhibition, Rochester, New York
1978 Resurgimiento, El Museo del Barrio, New York
1980 Artists Against Racism, Westbeth Gallery, New York
1981 Muestra de Pintura, Instituto de Cultura Puertorriqueña, San Juan, Puerto Rico
1981 Latin American Art, Stroudsberg College, Pennsylvania
1981 Arboles de Octubre, Galería Morivivi, New York
1981 Hand-painted Photographs, Photo Gallery, New York
1982 Latin American Contemporary Artists, Fordham University, New York

Major Projects

1979 "Stampede", Wall mural, 100' x 40', NAACP Day Care Center, Bronx, New York
1980 "Cockfight", Wall mural, 60' x 20', Pyramid House, Bronx, New York

Reviews

1978 David Herkovitz. "It was grey even when it was sunny", The Village Voice, September 24, 1978.
1980 Osiris Delgado, Encyclopedia of Puerto Rico [art volume x, Editorial EDIT]

Lectures and Publications

1976 Genealogy of Puerto Rican Art, Quimbamba, El Museo del Barrio, New York
1978 Puerto Rican Artists in New York, Votive, Stanford University, California.
1981 Lecture, "Puerto Rican Art", Georgetown University, Department of Fine Arts, Washington, D.C.
1982 Lecture, "Political Aspects of Puerto Rican Art", Cooper Union School of Science and Arts, New York.
List of Works

1. Interior con Zapato, 1972
   Oil on Canvas, 36 x 40
   Collection of Luis Feliciano, PR.

2. Caballo Viejo, 1972
   Oil on Masonite, 32 x 33
   Collection of Felix Toledo, PR.

3. Aniversario, 1972
   Oil on Masonite, 40 x 44
   Collection of Rosario-Nieves, PR.

4. Lemuria, 1972
   Oil on Masonite, 40 x 52
   Collection of Rosario-Nieves, PR.

5. Hueso I, 1972
   Oil on Canvas, 40 x 42½

6. Toma de Conciencia, 1973 (Zahahoreasa)
   Oil on Canvas, 50 x 50
   Collection of Luis Feliciano

7. Mollejas, 1973
   Oil on Canvas, 36 x 42
   Collection of Luis Feliciano

8. Apestocito, 1973
   Oil on Canvas, 50½ x 58

   Oil Stick on Paper, 50 x 40
   Collection of Frances and Samuel Lacher, NY.

10. Insecto y Bohlo, 1974
    Oil Stick on Paper, 50 x 40

11. Lagartijos, 1974
    Acrylic on Canvas, 68 x 80
    Collection of Felix Toledo, Washington, D.C.

12. Shazam, 1974
    Oil on Canvas, 50 x 60

13. El Techo, 1975
    Acrylic Skin on Canvas, 70 x 84
    Collection of Felix Toledo, Washington, D.C.

    Acrylic Skin on Canvas, 42 x 56
    Collection of Felix Toledo, Washington, D.C.

15. Insectos, 1975
    Oil Stick on Paper, 50 x 40
    Collection of Frances and Samuel Lacher, NY.

16. Children of Darkness I, 1975
    Acrylic Skin on Canvas, 42½ x 57

17. Demivan Cohoba Joraba, 1976
    Hanging Acrylic Skin, 40 x 50

18. Yombina, 1976
    Acrylic Skin on Canvas, 57 x 42

19. Compadre de Camuy, 1976
    Acrylic Skin on Canvas, 42 x 50
    Collection of Frances and Samuel Lacher, NY.

    Acrylic Skin on Canvas, 42 x 57
    Collection of Carol and Herbert Diamond, NY.

21. Orgánico, 1976
    Acrylic Skin on Canvas, 42 x 57

22. El Mal de Bubas, 1976
    Hanging Acrylic Skin, 55 x 37

23. Insectos I & II, 1976
    Hanging Acrylic Skin, 48 x 56

24. Bullfighter, 1977
    Acrylic Skin on Canvas, 48 x 56

25. Itiba, 1977
    Acrylic Hanging Skin, 48 x 56

26. Am Peluchi, 1977
    Acrylic Skin on Canvas, 57 x 42

27. Sultan Rts, 1977
    Acrylic Skin on Plexiglas, 46 x 56
    Collection of Bruce Wasserman, NY.

    Hanging Acrylic Skin, 48 x 60

29. Hijo de Itiba, 1977
    Acrylic Skin on Canvas, 46 x 60

30. Hijos del Caos, 1978
    Acrylic Skin on Canvas, 19 x 36
    Collection of Felix Toledo, Washington, D.C.

31. Shaman, 1978
    Acrylic Skin on Plexiglas, 26 x 36
    Collection of Lidia Torres, California

32. Virgen del Sagrado Corazón, 1978
    Acrylic Skin on Canvas, 18 x 15
    Collection of Felix Toledo, PR.

33. Children of Darkness III, 1978
    Acrylic Skin on Plexiglas, 18½ x 31
    Collection of Theda and Edward Shenberg, NY.

34. Trees, 1978
    Hanging Acrylic Skin, 80 x 55

35. Silla, Catre y Pupitre, 1978
    Acrylic Skin on Over Objects

36. Marine Landscape, 1979
    Acrylic Hanging Skin, 60 x 45

37. Pelea de Gallo, 1979
    Acrylic Skin on Canvas, 42 x 50
    Collection of Jorge Hernandez, NY.

38. Retorno a la Tierra, 1979
    Acrylic Skin on Canvas, 40 x 50
    Collection of Famila de la O-Medina, NY.

39. Insecto Interior, 1979
    Acrylic Skin on Canvas, 40 x 44
    Collection of Famila de la O-Medina, NY.

40. Ear, 1979
    Oil Stick on Paper, 50 x 40
    Collection of Frances and Samuel Lacher, NY.

41. Era Joven, 1979
    Acrylic Hanging Skin, 63 x 43

42. Planeta, 1979
    Oil Stick on Paper, 50 x 40

43. Libélulas, 1979
    Oil Stick on Paper, 50 x 40

44. Remontemonos, 1980
    Acrylic on Canvas, 50 x 60
    Collection of Felix Toledo, Washington, D.C.

45. Hueso II, 1980
    Acrylic Skin on Canvas, 47 x 55
    Collection of Felix Toledo, Washington, D.C.

46. Caracol, 1980
    Oil Stick on Paper, 37 x 49
    Jane & Jose Fuentes, NY.

47. Guabá, 1981
    Oil on Canvas, 52 x 60

48. Bocas, 1982
    Oil Stick and Pastel on Paper, 40 x 36

Dimensions are given in inches. Height precedes width. Unless indicated, collection of the Artist.
El Museo del Barrio
1230 Fifth Avenue
New York, New York 10029
(212) 831-7272

TRUSTEES
George Aguirre
Gilberto Álvarez
Ismael Betancourt
Angela Cabrera
Hon. Donald Grajales
Lillian López
Carota Maduro
José Morales, Jr.
Hon. Luis Neco
Carmen P. Nelson
Héctor Willems, Esq.

STAFF
Jack Agüeros
Jerry Álvarez
Lynne Beyer
Jacqueline Biaggi
William Bowles
Miriam Cintrón
Lillian Jiménez
Manuel Medina
Emilse Meléndez
Ruth Meléndez
Wilfred Napoleoni
John Narváez
Eva de la O
Maria Pabón
Gladys Peña
Diannelly Pereira
Freddy Rodríguez
Antonio Santiago
Elizabeth O. Toméns

El Museo del Barrio is a member of the American Association of Museums, the Museum Mile Association, and is supported by grants from New York State Council on the Arts National Endowment on the Arts, City of New York Department of Cultural Affairs, Private Foundations, Corporations, and Member Contributions.

The facility occupied by El Museo del Barrio is owned by the City of New York, and its operation is supported in part with public funds provided through the New York City Department of Cultural Affairs.

We appreciate the help of; Frances Lacher, Felix Toledo, Frank Espada, Luis Angel Curbelo, Prof. Felix Bonilla and David Moir, Director of Cathedral Works, The Cathedral Church of St. John The Divine. Special thanks to José Fuentes for his assistance in the preparations for this exhibit.